The last word in elegance applies to this season's showing of waists. What artists are enabled to do with what were originally known as simple shirtwaists is evidenced in the evolution of the wonderfully complete array of separate waists in the favored Georgette, crepe de chine—which is coming back strongly—in the marvelous combinations of Georgette and taffeth and in the more severe white waists.

There may be a scarcity of dyes in America—but no one would believe it, while looking over these boxed beauties in shades of flesh, blue, green and the like.

This season there is much beading and embroidery used, and the majority if the waist models come in long sleaves and rolling collars, although these collars are convertible into high effects at will.
